The Pelican's Pouch.
The pelican's pouch is its game bag. It stores the fish in the pouch and, when it has captured enough, goes to land and devours them at its leisure.

Heat of the Sun.
It is calculated that only a two thousand-millionth part of the heat emitted by the sun is caught by the earth, whose coal supply power is relatively so infinitesimal that if every bit of coal in the world were cast into one great bonfire and instantaneously burned it would not generate as much heat as the sun produces each tenth of a second.

To Keep Books From Mold.

A few drops of any perfumed oil will secure libraries from the consuming effects of moldiness and damp. Russian leather, which is perfumed with the odor of the birch tree, never gets moldy, and merchants suffer large losses of this article to lie in the docks in the most careless manner, knowing that it cannot sustain any injury from damp.

Vaseline on Shoes.

When shoes have become stiff and uncomfortable from constant wear in the rain or from lying by unused, apply a coat of vaseline, rubbing it in well with a cloth, and in a short time the leather will become soft and pliable.

SLIDE DOWN DRAINPIPE

Southern Girl's Escape From "Rest Cure Home"

LOVER WAS AWAITING HER

Had a Cab Ready, and When the Girl Arrived the Two Flew to the Sunny South Together.

Love laughed at locksmiths in the romantic imprisonment of Luda Ankrin, the seventeen-year-old Kentucky beauty who had been imprisoned in the home of her aunt at Steinway, N. Y., and now she is with Curtis Day, the youth of her choice, and is probably married to him by this time.

It was only a few weeks ago that Miss Ankrin met Day at Catsburg, Ky. They fell in love, there was a short courtship, and then Day went to

SHE HUGGED THE DRAINPIPE AND SLID.

Papa Ankrin asked for his daughter's hand. He was ordered out of the house, and an hour later the girl, with a chaperon, was on her way to the home of her aunt, Mrs. Julia Mays, who conducts a rest cure for fashionable folks at Steinway.

Day traced her there and found that she was imprisoned in the rest cure house. He suit looked hopeless until he found that he had a friend in Miss Hazel Ankrin, a sister of Luda, who was with her in the Mays mansion. Aided by Miss Hazel, Day's sweet heart made her escape from the rest cure home in a sensational manner.

One maid was stationed in the hall with instructions not to permit Miss Ankrin to descend below the second floor and was found on guard when Miss Mays returned.

Miss Hazel walked unconcernedly out of the house and grounds and disappeared. Then Miss Luda dropped a dress suit case out of the window to a man waiting below. When he had disappeared she climbed out of the window to the roof of a balcony, crawled across to a drainpipe and in regular tomboy fashion hugged the drainpipe and slid more rapidly than gracefully to the ground.

Picking herself up and lifting her skirts to give freedom to her movements, she ran across the ground like a frightened deer, jumped a low hedge and then climbed a tall fence and dropped over to freedom on the other side.

Children in a neighboring yard who had watched the escape, but gave no alarm, say that a cab with a male passenger and Miss Hazel was waiting half a block away and that Miss Luda sprang to it and jumped in and the cabman drove away as if he feared pursuit.

Not more than an hour after the pair had departed Mrs. Mays returned to the house. While she was scurrying around and trying to find some trace of the girl the telephone rang.

"Hello," said a man's voice. "This is Curtis Day. Luda and her sister are with me. We are going home. Good-by, aunt."

Swallows Three Dozen Eggs on Bet. Thomas O'Brien of Blackstone, Mass., swallowed three dozen eggs in a saloon in that town one night on a bet and is alive. The bet was for a nominal sum and the time was five minutes. O'Brien and his friend had been discussing the digestive qualities of eggs. O'Brien contended that he could do away with three dozen in five minutes. A wager was then made and O'Brien placed four in a glass of lager and drained the glass. Then, to show that he could stand a little more, O'Brien drank three extra eggs in a milk shake.

Killed by Fall of Five Feet.

Although the distance was only a little more than five feet, Charles Rule, forty-one years old, a salesman, was almost instantly killed by falling from the stoop of his home at 109 West Sixteenth street, New York city.

The Violet Snail.

The violet snail, very common in Europe and in some parts of this country, has the curious property of being able to inflate its body with air and thus become a true air raft.

AN EXCITING TRIP.

The Varied Perils of Navigation on the Yukon River.

Getting on a sand bar is a part of the Yukon programme, and we reached this act early in the afternoon of the first day. The river is constantly changing, and a new channel is made each year. All steamers carry huge poles, known as shears, or sometimes called "ships' legs." When a sand bar is struck the pole is dropped off the side and stands upright in the sand. A pulley is attached at the top, the engine is started and the boat lifted and swung forward six or eight feet. This process is repeated until the vessel is clear of the bar. During the jumping off process the passengers are sent aft in order to lift the bow. When somebody stupidly asked the captain how long we were going to stay at this point he answered, "Anywhere from an hour to a week." We were lucky in being fast for only two hours. The Selkirk, which followed a day later, spent the entire night on the same obstruction. Soundings were taken with a gaudily painted pole, which suggested a Fourth of July pole vaulting exhibition. The man who did the measuring had a singsong way of speaking, and he constantly drawled, "Two feet—two and a half—three feet—no bottom—four feet," until we were in deep water.

Late in the afternoon we reached Lake La Barge. Here the ice was from ten to eighteen inches thick and spread from shore to shore like a great field of snow. We pushed on, while the sharp ice pounded savagely against the hull, which was built of inch and half planks. It scraped and cut the sides of the boat and buckled and formed little ice mountains over the lake. We ran slower and slower until, after cutting through five miles, the captain decided that we could go no further in safety, so the Cakes tied up at an uninhabited island to wait until the sun and wind should cause the ice to break. The mosquitoes welcomed us and came aboard by the thousand. Some of the passengers rushed ashore and built a huge fire out of old logs in order to protect themselves from the pests; others climbed to the top of a hill and sat in a row like so many owls. All day Sunday we waited. The crew carried logs aboard and built an ice plow for the boat. After twenty-four hours' delay we cast off and went into the ice. The river is tortuous and muddy, and in many places the current runs nine miles an hour. Narrow gorges are entered, and at Five Finger rapids we were treated to the sensation of running the rapids between rocks scarcely twice the width of our boat apart. This place is considered extremely dangerous, and boats coming up the river, in order to avoid being dashed against the rocks, pick up a cable fastened on shore for that purpose and by winding it around the capstan pull themselves up the rapids.—Mrs. C. R. Miller in Leslie's Weekly.

Crushing a Clerk.

He was rather carelessly dressed, yet any one who is at all an observer could have seen at a glance that his clothes were of excellent material and had evidently been made by a good tailor. But the clerk in the hat shop was young, and he stood by watching the customer pull over an assortment of colored handkerchiefs until he struck one that caught his fancy. "I'll take this one," he said, handing it to the clerk.

"That's the New York Yacht club colors," remarked the clerk, as if that settled the question. The customer looked at him sharply and repeated his statement that he would take the blue and red and white hand he held in his hand.

"But you don't want that," protested the clerk. "That's only worn by members of the New York Yacht club."

"I'm one. Just put it on my hat, sonny," said the man dryly. The clerk wilted at once.—New York Press.

The Power of Gasoline.

In the tests recently made over country roads between New York and New Haven to determine how far two gallons of gasoline are capable of driving an automobile sixty-five machines of many sizes and types were used. The best performance was by a four cylinder machine of twelve horsepower, which ran eighty-seven miles. Another machine of the same make and same pattern ran only fifty-eight miles. The Iron Age points out that a weight of 1,500 pounds was moved eighty-seven miles on two pounds of gasoline, which means a ton hauled for half a cent.

The Eiffel Tower.

"An immense nail disgracefully transfixing the sky" is the effective description of the Eiffel tower with which a band of aesthetes have started a crusade against the offending structure. They have consecrated themselves to preserving and increasing the beauty of Paris and cry loudly for the destruction of the ridiculous eyecore as their first effort in that direction. The Eiffel tower was originally regarded as a great wonder.

Monks as Automobileists.

The monks of St. Bernard in the Alps are soon to appear as automobilists. They have received permission to run automobiles between the hospices of Grand St. Bernard and Simplon and Domo d'Ossola and Aosta. The chauffeurs will be chosen from the monks themselves, who will wear cowls.—London Mail.

Thrashing Machines.

Thrashing machines go back to 1756. A German artisan, Hohlfield, designed one in that year. In 1780 Andrew Meikle, a Scotch mechanic, produced one so perfect that despite nearly a century of improvements it is today in all essentials the same as the original.
